As AI-powered projects take over more of our lives, and tools continue to become smarter and more intuitive, users explore the possibilities and are more willing to experiment. There is a natural progression, rather than a sudden rush to the edges, as AI makes us more comfortable with not knowing. With the future of AI has already become a term used in many industries, it's only a matter of time before applications that are as intelligent as humans are installed in our homes, without rest. Once it made those features not only accessible, but made them so compelling that people were willing to pay to work in Photoshop and other big name applications. Adobe has even taken it a step further. It has announced the application of big data to scrutinize a user's photographs. Like Google Suggest, it was able to detect and retrieve similar faces on social media and elsewhere. They were able to tell your friends, "Hey, I think you look like this person or this outline." It then suggests an outline template that you can choose or even run a program to create and trace. Meanwhile, on Google, we are trying to do the same thing. But it is more complex, as it will have a variety of effects and finish the process, unlike Photoshop elements. The big names just can't follow their competitors. They want to be first. However, competition is still intense in the AI space, and it is a tight race: Most companies agree that at any given time, only one AI will run the show. This is a huge win for Adobe in terms of naming rights and any other generic brand recognition, but it is a game they may grow tired of in time. Once AI gets any deeper into the sector, the number of divisions will certainly increase exponentially.
